Methods Used Windows Error Reporting Like the name suggests, Windows Error Reporting (WER) is a program that is used to provide Microsoft with information about application compatibility issues in Windows. The information may help in the process of determining the cause of a reported error. When an error occurs, the operating system attempts to report the error via WER, and the application can then be examined by Microsoft experts, and the information can be used to fix the issue. The downside to using WER is that it is not very effective in terms of resolving issues. Diagnostic Tool When a problem occurs, the operating system attempts to report the problem to Microsoft using a tool, and it is this tool that your computer relies on to diagnose problems. You can find the diagnostic tool built into Windows, such as the Device Manager and Device Manager (Display). A diagnostic tool scans your computer for hardware faults or other problems and reports the findings.
