The federal Bureau of Labor Statistics says the unemployment rate jumped from 6.1 percent in January (seasonally adjusted) to 6.3 percent in February. That means a whopping 410,000 people have lost their jobs in the past three months, and 750,000 in the past 12 months. A big reason for the large February increase is that the labor market shrunk by 35,000 jobs. Not that anyone was expecting a huge increase in employment, and not that there's a lot of good news to extract from the weak labor market numbers, but the lost employment is sure to fuel expectations that the Fed's plan for further quantitative easing may soon be enacted. The forecasters' consensus projection of 1.7 percent is looking a little too optimistic, given the economy's fragility. The government said "unexpected business-cycle dynamics and volatility in the components of the nonfarm payrolls total (spikes, lulls, and shifts) are not consistent with a solid pattern of labor market performance." 1cb139a0ed
