Articles published in English between June 1983 and March 2011 were identified from a MEDLINE, Excerpta Medica database,

ScienceDirect, CINAHL, SportDiscus,

Coglit, Cochrane Controlled Trials

Register, PubMed, and PEDro. The reference lists of identified articles were searched for additional studies. The methodological quality of selected articles was assessed using the Effective Public Health Practice Project (EPHPP) scale. A total of 34 articles were identified by the electronic search of the literature, of which 32 focused on self-care in knee or hip osteoarthritis. These 32 articles supported the use of self-care as an effective adjunct to the treatment and rehabilitation of osteoarthritis. Studies that focused on the benefits of self-care reported a reduction in joint pain, improved functional capacity, reduced dependency and improved quality of life. Self-care has been shown to be an effective adjunct to conventional therapy and has a role in the rehabilitative process. Self-care can be implemented as a costeffective and safe approach to improving outcomes for individuals with osteoarthritis.1. Technical Field The present disclosure relates to a light emitting diode and a wavelength converting member that are used for, e.g., a light source for optical communication. 2. Related Art Light emitting diodes (hereinafter, referred to as LEDs) have advantages such as low power consumption and high response speed, and have been used in display apparatuses, lighting apparatuses, and other various apparatuses. In particular, in recent years, as is described in JP-A-2005-182326, to enhance the power efficiency of the LED light source, a
