Category:English language learning software Category:Windows-only softwareQ: How to multiply a column by a number in a spreadsheet? I want to multiply a column in a spreadsheet by a number, so instead of having this: ... I'd have this: I'm willing to use formulas instead of macros. A: In an Excel 2010+ sheet, you can do it directly using the Formula bar: =A1*2 This will multiply the value in cell A1 by 2, and insert the result in cell A1. You can get fancy with this: =A1*C2 This will multiply the value in cell A1 by the value in cell C2 and insert the result in A1. A: You can do this by using SUMIF. First, for this example you must make sure that the column with the values you want to multiply has a header called "MyValue" so that it will be easier to find and click on in Excel. Then, in the worksheet where you want to multiply the values, type "=SUMIF($A$1:$A1,A1,B1:B1)" where
