Interleukin-2 gene therapy has shown promise in the treatment of AIDS. Unfortunately, this approach is limited in that only a very small number of patients achieve long term immune reconstitution. In this proposal, we describe a novel cytokine gene therapy approach that is designed to enhance the efficacy of IL-2 gene therapy. As demonstrated in the mouse model, the addition of local IL-15 gene therapy, to conventional IL-2 gene therapy, enhances both the expansion and maintenance of effector and memory CD4 and CD8 T cells. In addition, IL-15 gene therapy has an important effect on CD8 T cell proliferation in vivo. The effects of IL-15 gene therapy are achieved by activating and expanding IL-15 responsive natural killer (NK) cells and cytokine produced type 1 natural killer T (NKT) cells, both of which are directly cytotoxic to tumor targets. We propose that the combination of IL-2 gene therapy and IL-15 gene therapy would provide a synergistic effect on T cells. The goal of our specific aims is to determine whether the combination of IL-2 and IL-15 gene therapy will improve CD4 and CD8 T cell recovery in SIV infected monkeys. In AIM 1 we will demonstrate that the addition of IL-15 to IL-2 gene therapy will promote the expansion and maturation of virus-specific, SIV-specific CD4 and CD8 T cells. In AIM 2 we will determine whether the addition of IL-15 to IL-2 gene therapy will also stimulate and maintain the functionality of a broad spectrum of SIV-specific, IFN-gamma secreting cells. In AIM 3 we will determine whether the addition of IL-15 to IL-2 gene therapy will inhibit polyclonal and SIV-specific CD8 T cell proliferation in vivo. The proposed studies will determine whether the combination of IL-2 and IL-15 gene therapy will provide an effective and durable immune reconstitution following SIV infection and the long term immunological consequences. Successful completion of these studies will lay the groundwork for the development of therapies for human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) disease. In addition, the studies will provide important information on the use of cytokine gene therapy for the treatment of cancers and viral infections in general.5), at least one member selected from the group consisting of organic acid salts, water-soluble amino acid salts, sugar alcohols, polysaccharides, and organic ionic
