Given that there is so much available information, it can be difficult for a user to search for specific information in an efficient manner. For example, the first half of the twentieth century was driven by broadcast technology in which one or more radio stations would transmit broadcasts in which information was associated with a particular song. Users who desired to listen to a particular song could tune to a particular radio station that would play a particular song. In this manner, the volume of information broadcasted was much less than it is now. Also, in this old system, the amount of information that could be stored for users to access was limited. Given that the volume of information available to the user was small, users could easily access the information that they desired. Due to the relatively small amount of information stored in the broadcast system and the ease of access, users only needed to be familiar with one or two songs in order to be able to easily access information related to those songs. Even when a user may not have known much about a particular song or artists, the user could still access that information quite easily. For example,

I have a 2 GB USB disk, on a Windows system, which I use to perform ordinary backup tasks. The data on that disk is growing steadily, as I make new files, and remove old ones. I am currently running out of space for backup files, and so I want to clear up my USB drive. Is there a recommended tool which will do this automatically and safely? I am aware of the free (and excellent) Un-Delete tool which does just that, but I am currently using Windows Vista 32 bit
