Lia Sarkashian Lia Sarkashian (born November 19, 1964) is a former amateur Canadian freestyle wrestler and Olympic bronze medalist. She lost the bronze medal match in the women's freestyle 60 kg. Sarkashian competed at the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles where she won a bronze medal. She later coached and trained some of her younger wrestlers, such as her daughter-in-law Kelly Hansen-Sarkasian. During the 2005 World Wrestling Championships, Sarkashian was suspended by the Canadian Wrestling Federation for conducting a steroid ring at her home and was later banned by the International Wrestling Federation. Ben Cayetano opened the first session of the state’s new citizen's legislature. He said one of the key factors in choosing Jan. 7, 1999, for the first session was its peaceful transition away from the protests that marked the past two legislative sessions. "We are in a new day. We can now look ahead and tell the future what is best for us. And it is for the better," he said. In fact, the new legislature, which will be used as a pilot for future citizen's legislatures in the state, is of a political composition that should be encouraging to even the most apprehensive. Of the 34 seats in the legislature, 12 will be filled by the Legislature's 3 member redistricting commission, two by the governor and the remaining 18 by two election districts representing urban and rural communities. As for the two elective committees, one will have nine representatives for the eight counties and the other 13 representatives from three districts covering the islands. Despite the limited numbers in the new legislature, it will actually have more power than the current Legislature and then-Gov. John D. Waihe'e. The
