A wide variety of urea derivative compounds having various therapeutic and biological uses are known, and some of them have already been put to practical use. A wide variety of methods are known for synthesizing urea derivative compounds. For example, a method in which an amine is converted into an oxime in the presence of a dialkyl amine such as di-n-butylamine, followed by a reaction with carbon monoxide, in the presence of a metal carbonyl catalyst such as a rhodium-phosphine complex, is known (Japanese Laid-open Patent Publication No. 1988-84432). A method in which an amine is converted into an oxime in the presence of a low valent rhodium carbonyl catalyst such as bis(3,5-dimethyl-1-pyrazolyl)ruthenium carbonyl, followed by a reaction with carbon monoxide, is known (Japanese Laid-open Patent Publication No. 1988-84433). A method in which an amine is reacted with carbon monoxide in the presence of a rhodium carbonyl catalyst in the presence of a tertiary phosphine such as triphenylphosphine, is known (Japanese Laid-open Patent Publication No. 1988-84434). A method in which an amine is reacted with carbon monoxide in the presence of a low valent rhodium carbonyl catalyst, in the presence of a tertiary phosphine such as tri-n-butylamine-triphenyl-phosphine, is known (Japanese Laid-open Patent Publication No. 1988-84435). A method in which an amine is reacted with carbon monoxide in the presence of an organometallic complex such as a bisphosphine-rhodium carbonyl complex, is known (Japanese Laid-open Patent Publication No. 1988-84436). A method in which an amine is reacted with carbon monoxide in the presence of a metal carbonyl catalyst such as a rhodium-phosphine complex, is known (Japanese Laid-open Patent Publication No. 1995-159262).
