Its goal is to simulate the mouse actions in a "swiss-army way" and, therefore, to be very robust and flexible. The simplicity is the first step. On the other hand, it is not a mouse replacement, it is only a way to control the mouse actions of other software with the mouse of the computer. This will make it easier and more comfortable to use for you. Please note that it is a poor simulation of the mouse in term of speed and precision. It is very easy to configure. No knowledge of keyboard configuration is required. There is a demo mode for everyone. You can start with it if you want to try the application and if you find it useful. KeyMouse was tested in Windows XP. It should work in Windows 2000 as well. If you do not know how to install it, read the INSTALL file. This project is not an alternative to JMouse or any other mouse replacement. There is not yet a Mac version. Main functions The program is composed by a list of actions that can be performed by keystrokes.
