Suppose I have a circuit with a 110V line that provides power to a number of devices (appliances and lighting). The devices are all 120V. There is a switch that will allow me to turn devices off and on. I'd like to replace the switch with a direct switch. When I go to turn devices on or off I have to dismount a large, heavy load so this is why I want a direct switch, it is not difficult to dismount the load. The load is on a 230V circuit. The switch connects to the load and devices via the terminal block and the neutral connections. My question is what is the safest way to do this as far as wiring is concerned? A: No, you can't do that. You should replace the switch with a triple-pole double-throw switch. This is a device which connects the neutral to 6a5afdab4c
