Baseliner is a simple Firefox extension that displays a customizable grid on any page you visit. Internet use in pediatric palliative care. The Internet is becoming an increasingly important resource for many patients and their families in the palliative care setting. However, few studies have addressed its use in this population. This study presents a descriptive exploration of the Internet use of inpatients and outpatients at a tertiary care children's hospice. The majority of patients had high literacy skills and engaged in Internet use via mobile devices. While access to computers in the pediatric hospice was limited, patients used their mobile devices in many of the same ways. Although limited by small sample size and convenience, this study highlights the usage patterns of both inpatients and outpatients at a tertiary children's hospice. As use of the Internet increases, it will become an increasingly important resource for patients and families in the palliative care setting. Pre-Select to Save $$$ Save $$$ While You Wait! Field of the Invention This invention pertains to the field of modular panel systems used for room partitioning and specifically to systems in which the panels are supported by a wall structure. b. Description of the Related Art In constructing a room, various discrete wall panel elements are required to be mounted in fixed relationship to a wall structure. Typically, the wall panels are mounted to a wall structure by brackets which are generally permanent structure, and hence not easily removable. Often, a contractor will attempt to repair the wall panel system, usually by removing the brackets from the wall structure and reattaching them to the wall structure at different locations or by removing or replacing the wall panels themselves. Both of these efforts represent a considerable waste of time and effort in attempting to repair the wall panel system. If the wall panels are removed or damaged, time and effort is then expended in reinstalling or replacing the wall panels. Although the prior art is not believed to

Baseliner is a grid for webpages. With the help of the customizable grid, you can accurately position the elements of a webpage. Maintain the flexibility of Web design software, without the need for an extra plug-in. Tips and tricks to help your workflow become more effective. It's simple to get started, the best part is that the customization is limitless. You can use the grid as a ruler, choose the baselines based on where you need to, and tweak their opacity. The extension doesn't replace the need for a ruler or any other additional tools, but it does help you focus on the important stuff first, and at the right angle. Baseliner is also available as an extension for Chrome. GIF Animation is a first for me personally. It allows me to use text and images in a much more sophisticated way than I've been able to previously. It's still early days but it's already a winner for me. It's a small add-on and it could easily be a suite. I think the best way to explain the functionality of this is by example: Every element has a small title that displays when the 'little gem' on the right is clicked The image shows up under the title if it's related to the title The text below the image if it's not related to the image On the left hand side a small balloon and bell icon to tell the user what they can do As a developer I've only had a chance to use this on one webpage. The upgrade button is the one I've been most impressed by. Sometimes people look at my work and say it has a 'design style' to it. I would love to be able to show that to them! It definitely feels in keeping with my previous work and it's got a huge benefit over CSS that is only possible in most browsers. Directions: Extensions/Add-ons for Firefox has always been something I've hesitated to use because they feel like they're too big. The idea of big add-ons is they cause lots of issues. I don't believe that's the case with this one. Some add-ons might require a bit of manipulation to get working properly but this is quite a simple one. Just search for 'GIF Animation 09e8f5149f'

This 1994 Chevrolet truck is finished in two-tone brown and black, while the wheels are alloys in a darker finish. Power comes from a 3.4-liter V6 paired to a manual transmission, which allows for 6 mpg. A column-shift automatic is fitted on top of that, and a cargo box sits behind the removable rear bench seat. This truck has covered 3.3 miles and has not been accident-free, as indicated by a small dent in the driver's door, a small ding in the outside of the rear bumper, and two accident-related dents on the front doors. The seller says that there is some coolant in the oil pan, and recommends replacing it before driving further. This truck is located in Calgary, Alberta and is now listed for $15,900 OBO. The interior features gray carpet and a metallic gray vinyl bench seat. The instrument panel has been repainted, as has the dashboard, and there are no rips or tears to be seen. The wiring harness has been rewired, and the air conditioning system is working as shown by the window units. The manual transmission shifts via a column-shift lever, and the vehicle is fitted with power windows and locks. The exterior is finished in two-tone brown and black on the body, with the steel wheels being fitted with new two-tone gray and black covers. Damage to the paint is indicated by the specks of rust to be found in the
