Thursday, September 25, 2012 Beware of the Blue Pill It's a strange feeling to realize that you've been tricked. Rarer still is realizing that you've been tricked by yourself. How could you, a good-humored, intelligent, well-meaning person, be led astray like that? For two years you told yourself you wouldn't give up this or that. Then something new came along and distracted you with fresh promises of tasty delights. Yet even the newest temptation has proved to be less enticing than your best hope. What happened to that? What happened to your desire to pursue what you thought was the best course? What have you become? In an odd way, perhaps it doesn't matter. Even if you were only able to identify your self-deception in retrospect (as I am now), how can you change it? I worry that I've been tricked by the same person or personified tendency that has led to most, if not all, of my own self-sabotage in the past. I've become convinced that I have fallen short of my highest potential in the following ways: I've been too timid to risk living outside my comfort zone. I've been too timid to be honest with myself and others. I've been too timid to risk

Treatment of the patient with necrotizing fasciitis. Necrotizing fasciitis (NF) is a rapidly progressive soft tissue infection that may lead to mortality if proper treatment is not instituted in a timely fashion. We review the literature to better understand the pathophysiology, diagnosis, and treatment of NF, as well as discuss the particular difficulties and etiologies that the treating physician encounters in the management of these patients. The purpose of our review is to aid in the recognition and diagnosis of NF, as well as to help guide the clinician through a large and rapidly changing field of diagnostic and therapeutic medicine. Crimean Parliament votes to suspend Russia's accession to the WTO

The Crimean parliament has decided to suspend Russia's accession to the World Trade Organization (WTO). It's reported that the decision is a response to the diplomatic pressure Russia is facing because of the Crimean crisis. Crimea will have to remain as a part of Ukraine following the agreement on an understanding on the basis of dialogue. The heads of Crimea's parliament and republic, its Supreme Council, Sergey Aksenov and Anton Gerashchenko, have already issued a statement opposing Russia's accession to the WTO. "As a first, Crimea cannot join any international bodies without the approval of the population. Crimea has always welcomed the European Union and not taken part in any of its activities. We know that signing an agreement with the EU will be a betrayal of the sovereignty of the people of Crimea," said Aksenov. This follows the formal proceedings to become a full member of the WTO. The text of the declaration was published online on the website of the Crimean parliament. It also includes the declaration of the Crimean parliament that it will be a part of the Eurasian Economic Union (EAEU). Aksenov said that the document will be signed when a new Crimean president is elected. The Russian Federation wants to join the WTO in early 2012.
