Firesoft is a portable and easy to use application launcher with unlimited number of possibilities which is developed using Java technology. It supports Java 1.5 or higher so your Windows operating system does not need to be supported, in fact it can even be built on newer versions of Windows. Supported platforms include Windows 95, 98, Me, NT, 2000, XP, Vista, 7 and 8. Key features:

- The program provides shortcut window for easy access to specific launchers.
- It allows adding as many launchers as you want to the application and keeping the list sorted in order of predefined categories.
- You can assign hotkeys to some of the items on the list.
- It can open any kind of file or website.
- The application allows you to access its configuration page which is very useful for arranging your launchers.
- It is portable, i.e. it requires no installation. You can easily pack it to a USB Flash Drive for easy usage.
- It does not rely on any specific graphics toolkit and you don't need to configure it for the display resolution.
- It is in stand-alone form, i.e. does not use any additional resources.
- It can open specific applications without any additional parameters.

Launch C.Ripoff DB to see what we're talking about. What does that mean? It's a database of suspicious credit cards, ATM cards and stuff. They say you can buy stuff with it, but I don't know... I tried to buy stuff, and the price changed into $29.95. What? you say, but I already paid $19.95. HA! Anyway, there's plenty of other cool stuff in the members area, and you only have to wait 2 hours to see how much you can get for next to nothing. I bought a new laptop and I want to make it my default system... but I don't want all my windows on it. I'm thinking of installing a different operating system and... uh... booting from the drive. And then installing Ubuntu Linux. Can I do that? I'm using a Gateway laptop with Windows XP. Yup, you can do it, but, uh... it's not exactly easy. You have to take the hard drive out, since you can't just replace it. That makes things easier. Install Windows first, then Linux

Bertha belted out a rude awakening in my house this morning. She was crawling around in the bedroom and I was taking a quick shower. I heard a honk and when I came out of the bathroom, Bertha was terrified and hiding on the bottom shelf. I ran back into the bathroom to make sure she hadn't chipped a tooth as she was looking for a way to safely go under the vanity. I could hear her trying to cry out but it didn't come out. I came out of the bathroom and she was covered in foam. I grabbed her and carried her into the living room. I was horrified. I didn't want to take her outside in case the neighbors witnessed this. I wanted her to try and know what was so bad about her. I put her in the bathtub and ran for the camera. Let me just tell you. This is no good. This is not normal. No normal cat is frightened and aggressive after a bath. she was trying to be mauled. I was so confused that she didn't know it was a bath. She would play and bathe and usually then realize that she was in some sort of special place and lay down. I got her out of the tub and into the hallway and out of sight. I expected her to know that this wasn't a normal place. She has never acted like this before. I was unsure if I could clean her up without having another bath. I got her shampoo and was going to scrub her back. She turned around and let me know in no uncertain terms that she didn't like that. She didn't ever lay down on me like that. She hissed. I took it as a good sign and shampooed her. I shampooed every inch of her body. Not only that, I blow dried her. She did not like that either. I was much in need of a haircut so I had to trim her toenails. I don't think I've ever seen her sit still for that. As I was cleaning her she was trying to screech and hiss. I'll admit that I had fears that I hadn't seen the last of her furballs. As I tried to pull them from her stomach she looked like she was in pain. But she was calmer and I was b7e8fdf5c8

The embodiments herein relate to a device that allows one person to independently climb up and down a ladder without the use of the hands. A ladder or any similar structure that spans between a first and second, generally horizontal, surface is commonly used to reach a desired area at the second surface. However, a person often must use his or her hands to grip or otherwise hold the ladder to reach the desired location. For example, if a ladder is used to gain access to the roof of a structure, the person will generally have to position his or her hands at the rungs of the ladder in order to safely climb. When the structure is unstable, such as when the structure is a thatched roof, the person will generally have to use the hands to hold onto the roof of the structure as the person ascends the ladder. Not only is this exercise strenuous, it may be dangerous. For example, if the person decides to remove his or her hands from the ladder and falls, the person may fall onto the person or persons below him or her, causing damage. The ladder may be secured to a structure to prevent a person from falling while climbing the ladder. However, typically in such situations, the ladder is attached to the structure by fastening the ladder to the structure such that the ladder is stationary and the person has to continually exert himself or herself to ascend and descend the ladder. As can be seen, there is a need for an apparatus that allows for a person to utilize the ladder independently of the person's hands, and the ladder may move up and down on the ladder so that the ladder can be used as a climbing structure, but the ladder does not move into and out of contact with the person.cheats = 7 cheat0_desc =
