Below is a video of the new Madden NFL 25 beta showing off the new features: EA Sports also released a new 'Inside Inside Edge' feature, which gives you a glance at the rules to the matches you are about to play. In a similar vein, this week's Fifa released 'Ultimate Team' Mode. This allows you to customise your Ultimate Team squad by unlocking FIFA content, making them more powerful and earning player and team coins that can be spent on items that will help you improve your squad. It's a great way to play with friends and can lead to a lot of friendly banter between teammates. I liked it a lot and I think it's well-paced, reasonably-difficult and offers enough variation. Overall, I think it's a great addition to Ultimate Team and a welcome departure from FIFA Ultimate Team's history of the mode consisting of repetitive, straight-up free-to-play battles to try and win and coins that could then be spent on things like kits. It's a bit of a shame that EA has decided that this year they're going to try and take the online Ultimate Team experience to a whole new level. This is most definitely a move in the right direction but for some reason they seem to have forgotten how to make their FIFA games fun in the long-term. I can't imagine FIFA 19 is going to be as good as FIFA 15 or 16 was in regards to actual gameplay and gameplay alone, but the revamped story mode and the ESPN integration are promising. Anyway, let's get to the news for this week: City Games and new kits For the first time since this feature was introduced, it seems EA Sports are actually listening to player feedback: Players can now purchase new home and away kits for their favourite football club in FIFA 19. Buy new kits, track their impact and see player ratings updated in real-time. Now available for FIFA 19, the new system is integrated into the 'Buy' screen. As new kits are added, they appear in the match engine as the 'New Kit' and if a player is in possession of the new kit, his performance indicators update on the pitch. GIFs of Kane, Lingard and Sidwell As promised, and for the first time, we are getting some videos showing off some of the new features. I've gone back to the Wembley Stadium Final (couldn't go this weekend, due
