LPS induced gingival melanin pigmentation in mice. II. Comparison of two topical methods in relation to gingival crevicular fluid kinetics. An assessment of two methods for inducing mucosal and papillar melanin pigmentation in mice has been made. The interval between induction and initiation of tooth brushing (challenge) resulted in a high correlation between the two groups in the ability to detect the pigmented sites in the gingiva by means of the alkali buffered gingival fluid (ABGF). This study also demonstrated that the gingival fluid accumulation rate was identical for both the untreated and pigmented groups, with the notable exception of the 45-min time period in which a reduction was detected for the untreated group. It was concluded that the ABGF methodology is in agreement with the pigmented sites of the pigmented group, but with the exception of a reduction of ABGF of the untreated group at 45 min. has been a problem as inmates have become faster than simple ID cards can cope. More recently, a number of countries have been reported to be considering the use of RFID and NFC for similar purposes in prisons and other institutional settings. "NFC and RFID will prove a boon in managing the movement of goods and materials, as well as cash, checks, and ID cards, into, through and out of institutions, reducing the need for secondary controls, and ultimately leading to lower costs to taxpayers," Stephens explains. The challenge is to control access to the technology, especially if both readers and tags are deployed. An enterprising reader technology could provide a gateway into a prison - just not an easy one. Those concerned
