A procedure to localize the glioma probe for metastatic tumor marker CA 125 in patients with prostatic cancer. Using a simple blood test procedure, we localized the tumor marker CA 125 to the prostatic cancer. In this procedure, the patient's peripheral blood is first aliquot for CA 125 assay, and all aliquots are assayed using a soluble immunoradiometric assay. The patient with the highest CA 125 value is then asked to give one or two fistfuls of blood from his or her vena saphena magna, and then to hold it up for five minutes to allow the CA 125 level in the blood in the prostate to build up. The blood then is assayed for CA 125, and the results are reported as a "number of minutes versus CA 125" figure. Of seven patients, we could map all seven sites where CA 125 had its highest levels to the prostate. Nine times, the prostate was the only metastasis in the whole body. Once in the ureters was not on the prostate, but was found in a lymph node. With a simple procedure, the localization of the metastatic sites of CA 125 enabled us to decide at an early stage which patients to treat and to plan treatments effectively. Harvard, which received a perfect 4,000 on the APR, nearly matched Indiana's No. 2 score of 3,996 and ranked behind only UNLV's 3,997. Harvard maintained an academic standing similar to No. 3 Kansas, which garnered a score of 3,998. Auburn (3,997) and Arizona State (3,996) were also among the top 10. It was a far different scene at the bottom of the APR rankings. Louisville, Cincinnati, VCU and Rutgers all received failing scores of 827. Louisville's score was a striking decrease from last year's 1,053, when the Cardinals were the only FBS school to achieve an APR score of more than 1,000. And Louisville's score was an even steeper decline from the 1,766 APR score in 2012. The Cardinals also went from receiving
