“Our aim with this technology is to deliver the player-relevant authentic player movements that add to the sport’s authenticity,” said EA SPORTS Executive Producer Dan Anderson. “We’ve invested a lot of time and detail into giving a more accurate and authentic experience to the players and the fans around the world.” “Players are naturally fast and technical athletes and so the more natural movements they can incorporate into FIFA 22, the better the game experience is for them,” said Stefan Gates, Head of Product at DICE Motion. “FIFA 22 will also utilize motion capture data from professional and regional players to ensure our players are equipped with the top-end movements needed for the new and improved controls.” Taking Action The engine’s newest artificial intelligence helps players make quick decisions on the field. Additionally, the all-new physics engine and expansive new open-world environment offer players greater freedom on how they carry out gameplay and how they approach challenges. Players will also receive new intelligent defensive tactics that anticipate their opponents’ movements, while innovative new AI tactics and referee-controlled system will help them exploit the tactics of their opponents. FIFA 22 introduces a new tackling mechanic to the action. Together with new animation tools, a new “impact” system helps players accurately and realistically feel the exact impact of every tackle. FIFA 22 also introduces dynamic movement transitions to the momentum-based, fluid passing gameplay of recent FIFA titles. Momentum transitions create more realistic ball flight and movement and increase the accuracy of passes and through balls. FIFA 22 also features a new multiple ball control system for players that gives them the ability to accurately juggle multiple ball touches during a possession. Videos FIFA 22, which will be playable at EA Play 2016, will also be playable at a number of other gaming events this year. Stay tuned for additional details. In the meantime, check out some FIFA 22 gameplay videos: FIFA 22 multi-player “Game of the Year” Pack demo, features eight game modes across three game modes.
