Interferon-gamma induces the proliferation and activation of a large proportion of human gamma delta T lymphocytes. We have investigated the effects of the cytokine interferon-gamma (IFN-gamma) on gamma delta T lymphocytes. Adult peripheral blood mononuclear cells (PBMC) stimulated with anti-CD2 antibody, Sepharose 4B and phytohemagglutinin (PHA) were used to study the surface expression of alpha beta and gamma delta TCR. IFN-gamma (250 U/ml) alone or together with anti-CD2 antibody was added to the culture. After stimulation for 96 h, the numbers of positive cells were counted in each of four categories: (a) alpha beta bearing cells; (b) gamma delta-bearing cells; (c) delta-bearing cells co-expressing CD2 and CD56; and (d) cells co-expressing CD2 and CD56 which were gamma delta-positive. The addition of IFN-gamma increased the numbers of alpha beta and gamma delta TCR positive cells. Some of the gamma delta T cells lacked CD2 and CD56 expression and were found to be highly enriched in the culture when IFN-gamma was added. The frequency of gamma delta T cells was increased more than that of alpha beta T cells in the presence of IFN-gamma. However, in contrast to alpha beta T cells, stimulation with IFN-gamma for up to 48 h in bulk cultures resulted in the loss of gamma delta TCR positive cells from the culture, accompanied by a marked
