The proposal was reviewed and approved for a total of 2 years by the NIH with the title "PET Imaging of NMDA Receptors and Metabolism in Multiple Sclerosis". We have now changed the title of the grant to "PET Imaging of Glutamate Receptors and Metabolism in Multiple Sclerosis" (MS). This revised grant is a renewal application, with a total duration of 4 years. The goal of the project is to use PET with specific radioligands to characterize changes in NMDA and AMPA receptor binding, energy metabolism, and glutamate transport in the brains of subjects with MS. The studies will be based on PET imaging with ligands that have been used in clinical studies to define specific alterations of brain function in MS. To achieve the desired goal of characterization of these processes in MS the following specific aims are proposed: 1) To determine regional changes in NMDA and AMPA receptor binding sites in MS brain. 2) To determine regional changes in cerebral energy metabolism in MS brain. 3) To determine regional changes in glutamate transport in MS brain. The work will be done in a cohort of subjects with well-characterized MS and well-characterized normal age-matched healthy controls. A valid PET image will be obtained for each subject using 18F-Fluorodeoxyglucose (FDG). The subjects will be imaged first with 18F-Fluoro-A-85380, a metabotropic glutamate receptor radioligand that is being developed to image NMDA receptors in animal studies. We predict that the accumulation of the radiotracer is decreased in MS compared to controls. Subsequent PET imaging will be done using 18F-Fluoro-6-DG (2-N-18F-A-D-serine), a radioligand

Windows XP Tablet Edition 2005ISO ã¸.Introduction

*Corynebacterium diphtheriae*is a gram-positive, aerobic, non-motile, pleomorphic bacillus. Most infections occur in the respiratory tract, with or without distant sites involvement. In addition, *C. diphtheriae*causes superficial or deep pyogenic infections. The few cases of invasive *C. diphtheriae*infections usually occur in individuals who have had antecedent skin or soft tissue injury. *C. diphtheriae*is an important pathogen in cases of malignant otitis media and is considered to be a contaminant in the otitis media with effusion associated with measles or mumps. We report a case of esophageal perforation due to *C.

diphtheriae*infection in a child with recurring cough and fever, who was later diagnosed with bronchopneumonia. Case presentation

A 5-year-old boy was referred to our pediatric surgery department due to fever, cough and vomiting. Ten days prior to presentation, he had a rash in the left groin, associated with pain in the left inguinal area. The infant's mother and siblings were in good health, and there was no contact with other members of the family. Physical examination revealed no lymphadenopathy. Respiratory and abdominal examinations were normal. Neurological examination revealed no abnormalities. The patient was febrile (38.3°C), with respiratory rate of 40 breaths per minute, and blood pressure of 110/68 mmHg
