The algorithm is the following: In the learning and adaptation stage, the ensemble model is generally much more powerful than that for a single oscillator, which usually follows a linear regression model. A biologic therapy to control immune-mediated chronic graft-versus-host disease: a randomized controlled trial of romiplostim. Immune-mediated chronic graft-versus-host disease (cGVHD) is a devastating complication of allogeneic hematopoietic stem cell transplantation (HSCT), with current treatments limited by their potential for adverse effects. This open-label, randomized, controlled trial assessed the efficacy and safety of romiplostim in patients with a clinical diagnosis of cGVHD. Eligible patients had persistent or recurrent cGVHD for >12 months despite continuous treatment with prednisone >0.25 mg/kg/d and/or an immunosuppressive agent. Patients were randomized to receive either placebo (n = 14) or romiplostim (n = 15) for a 4-month treatment period. The primary endpoint was the time to cGVHD resolution (defined as resolution for ≥9 months). Patients who discontinued therapy because of adverse events were censored at the date of last follow-up. Characteristics of patients in the romiplostim and placebo groups were similar at baseline. The median cGVHD duration was 35 months for both groups. By the end of the 4-month study period, there was an 84% probability of resolution in the romiplostim arm versus only 36% in the placebo group (P = .05). Adverse events occurred in 18 patients in the romiplostim group (range, 1-6 events/patient) and in 2 patients in the placebo group (range, 1-3 events/patient; P = .001). In the romiplostim group, 2 patients experienced serious adverse events (colitis and abdominal pain, both considered unrelated to the study drug). Two patients in the placebo group experienced infections that were deemed to be related to the study drug. This is the first double-blind randomized controlled trial of romiplostim for a cGVHD indication. Romiplostim was well tolerated and was associated with a significantly higher probability of d0c515b9f4

The last two months have been a bit rough for me. Not in a bad way, mind you. They have been completely amazing, filled with so many lovely surprises. And I'm grateful every day for the gift of life that I've been given. But all the love, "safe" feeling, and pretty earthy thoughts have made me a bit...weird. And in this age of social media, I haven't been posting a whole lot. I'm posting a lot in general, but only a few posts that really mean something to me. But my life hasn't been that quiet. I've been crafting, doing new art, training in my trade, spending time with friends, and speaking on a few panels this past year, so I've had things to put out there. I'm not that quiet. I also had a surgery, an absolutely beautiful one, to repair my bruised heart a few weeks ago. And I know in my head that things will go back to the way they were after this, but the consequences of that surgery lingered with me for days and days after. I wasn't always aware of how I felt, but it's been a part of me this past week. I didn't hate my past; I love my past. I love that year in Atlanta. And it's also what I feel in my heart, because that's all that I am to myself. This is all I know, and it's who I am, heart and soul. I know I'm not my past. And it's why I've been feeling...unable to live. Or, at least to fully live. The seeds of healing haven't even started to grow yet. So I'm sitting here, not sleeping at all, feeling in some ways that this is a dead
