citrate treatment for anovulatory women. The initial results of clomiphene citrate treatment of clomiphene resistant ovulatory women are presented. Four patients with amenorrhoea and oligomenorrhoea received clomiphene citrate, from 300 to 600 mg/day in varying doses, for 3 months. No significant changes in the basal body temperature and serum FSH level of the patients were observed during treatment. Pregnancy was achieved in three women. In one case the pregnancy was not maintained. Clomiphene citrate treatment is a new therapeutic method to induce ovulation in cases of clomiphene resistant ovulation.Merriam-Webster's editors, surprised by the immediate popularity of the trending term "post-truth," got to work to create an illustrated definition. Using the adjective as a noun seems to be an off-beat choice. While the initial rendering is rather cute, as the word gains traction with even more users,
