Tehran: Iran is calling on Arab nations to normalise ties with Tel Aviv as a way of driving the Israeli regime to the negotiating table, a senior Iranian official said on Sunday. "We believe that normalisation of relations with Tel Aviv is the key to driving the [Israeli regime] to the negotiating table," Mohammad Javad Jaber Ansari, the deputy foreign minister for Arab and African affairs, told Iran's Arabic-language newspaper Al-Sharq Al-Awsat. The official made the comments as Gulf Arab states plan talks this week in an attempt to end the worst diplomatic crisis in their relations with the Islamic Republic. Efforts to resolve the crisis have proved fruitless after Riyadh, Abu Dhabi and other Gulf states cut diplomatic ties with Tehran in July. Since then, a set of landmark UN sanctions on the Islamic Republic, imposed over Tehran's controversial nuclear programme, have taken effect, including an embargo on arms sales. Iran's decision to comply with the measures has led to a standoff with the Arab countries that supported the United States and its allies in imposing the sanctions, with the GCC states accusing Tehran of assisting militant groups in the region. Iran's support for Palestinian resistance, including the Islamic Resistance Movement (Hamas), its key ally in Syria, and Tehran's growing influence in Iraq have also strained ties with the GCC states. The Iranian official's remarks appeared to be a response to a call by Arab League Secretary-General Nabil El Araby at a meeting of Arab foreign ministers in Cairo last week to close ranks and restore the normalisation of ties. At the same meeting, officials from the Arab Gulf and the Arab League, which is based in Cairo, expressed readiness to normalise ties with Tehran. Iran and the GCC countries -- Saudi Arabia,
