replaced the classical caesarean section which was performed in an upward direction with the woman in full anaesthesia. The medico-legal consequences of a "modern" caesarean section have not been properly examined in developing countries. A retrospective study of the complications of 1203 caesarean sections carried out at the Mayday Maternity Hospital, UKM, Kuala Lumpur, over an 8-year period, has shown that the major complications of "modern" caesarean sections were significantly higher (22.2%) than those of the classical caesarean section (7.9%). The risk of major complications of "modern" caesarean sections was more than twice that of classical caesarean sections.
