Overview of 2010 How was 2010 for us? In terms of the U.S. economy, it was an ordinary year. In many respects, it was a success. Although the unemployment rate has remained high for most of 2010, we made great progress in ending long-term unemployment. But there is still more work to be done. According to the latest data, there are 16.1 million Americans unemployed, and 5.7 million of them have been out of work longer than 27 weeks. Nonetheless, 2010 was a good year for small business. In fact, most reports show small businesses are having a good year. This includes small businesses that are part of large corporations, as well as small businesses that are the sole proprietorships that make up the U.S. economy. Small business owners are still struggling. In 2010, small business owners cut their hours (25 percent) and saw their income fall (10 percent). Yet, small business owners are hiring (1.8 million jobs over 2010) in part to take advantage of the stimulus tax credits and increased demand. That demand is mainly manufacturing jobs, which pay far more than average hourly wages. These jobs can be very good for you and your family. In 2010, the middle class saw progress. According to the latest report, the number of American households poised on the cusp of prosperity (with earnings that are growing and less debt) increased by 900,000. This is the highest number since 2005. In 2010, we saw middle class Americans

What's New in the Photoshop 2021 (Version 22.0.0)?

The British left's mis-run media campaign to portray David Cameron's invitation to Donald Trump as a sop to America has now hit poor old St George's Hall in Liverpool. In one of the most cringeworthy moments of this campaign so far, and one the BBC has published on its website, Jeremy Corbyn is shown standing on a stage with Nigel Farage and someone looking remarkably like Donald Trump. Jeremy Corbyn is seen during the UKIP leader's election rally in Liverpool, Merseyside, on 2 May. Photograph: Gareth Fuller/PA To make matters worse, the photo is taken in the front row, meaning that Corbyn, the Labour leader, is clearly visible. The caption gives Corbyn's position as "second left" (and repeats the anti-Trump narrative that he is a closet fascist). While Ed Miliband took a warning from Trump during their debate, in July, Corbyn's party has backed up an endorsement from the proto-fascist in the White House. Taken at St George's Hall in Liverpool – once the seat of Tom Mclaren's father, Sir Jackie – Corbyn is seen performing songs with the New Feeling, a local indie band with whom he often duets, while Farage talks to the crowd. Remarkably, despite Corbyn's appearance, Farage's speech on the issue of Brexit is not widely reported on the BBC website. This is despite Farage bringing to heel the firebrand Ukip leader Nigel Farage, then, before he became the poster boy for the Donald. Farage, speaking at this year's UKIP conference, said: "I haven't yet met a world leader who didn't tell me he was a huge fan of Donald Trump." It is highly likely that Trump had not met Farage when he made that remark in November 2015. Farage's speech is not visible on the BBC's website.
