The Top 5 Social Media Marketing Mistakes By finding the right combination of social media marketing efforts, you can generate high quality leads for your business. However, some people misunderstand how social media marketing works and how to find success through it. With the proper education and information, you can save time and resources. When you make mistakes, you can waste hours or even days trying to fix them. Here are the top five mistakes that any new social media marketer can avoid. 1. Not Targeting the Right Audience Targeting the right audience for social media is an essential step in any marketing campaign. Even though social media can seem overwhelming, there are tools to help you target the specific audience that you want to reach. To do this, look at the demographics of your audience to determine the best way to reach them. For example, if you are aiming to sell products to women, look at the most popular social media channels to reach them. Social media is a great way to connect with your audience, but if you are not targeting the right audience, then you will waste a lot of time and effort. If you are not targeting the right audience, the best you can do is simply connect with them. 2. Not Asking for Feedback The best social media marketers do not rely solely on social media channels to determine if they are successful. That is why they also reach out to their audience to find out how they feel about their content. When you are receiving feedback from your audience, you can use it to improve your social media marketing efforts. If you are getting negative feedback from them, it can help you see what you need to change to improve the content that you are creating. You also know that your customers like your content when they are happy with it. 3. Not Maintaining a Good Relationship With Your Audience The best way to generate leads is to have a good relationship with your audience. This could be done by making yourself accessible through social media channels or even by the email that you send to your audience. When you maintain a good relationship with your audience, you can answer their questions, help them achieve their goals, and generally be a good asset to them. You will build trust and a positive relationship with them. This will lead to them being more likely to share your content and even to refer you to their friends and family. When you have a good relationship with your audience, you will find success on social media

He was in—and made full use of—the State of Minnesota for Valentine’s Day this year, which was just across the Minnesota River from his local mall. On the University of Minnesota’s website, a list of holiday closures for the school is presented. The entry for the 22nd of February lists the closure of the Minnesota River Field House and the Washington Road Student Recreation Center. Gotta love a day in Minnesota where it’s 75 degrees and sunny.” You can find Nardo’s photos and comments on his Facebook page. The slideshow of his adventures is here.
