Social Sharing Hearing back from Bell's legal team about how 'serious' the breach was Selcuk Oztunc Usta, a professor at Ryerson University in Toronto, was one of hundreds of thousands of people whose personal information was breached by Bell Mobility's servers. (Manuel Carrasquillo/CBC) Bell Canada has refused to pay for the storage of encrypted data belonging to hundreds of thousands of people whose personal information was breached. That information — including names, addresses, phone numbers, email addresses and financial data — includes details about the users' family members as well as personal information on people between the ages of 18 and 65. Bell has faced increasing criticism over the breach, including calls for the company to return the money to affected customers. Earlier this month, nearly 30 organizations and companies signed a letter calling for Bell to make good on its promise of free lifetime storage of personal information it had collected on customers. A few weeks later, Bell's lawyers went before a Montreal court — taking the unusual step of appearing in person — to ask a judge to reject a class-action lawsuit brought by dozens of affected Canadians, and to cancel any class actions or demands for monetary compensation. The request to set aside the lawsuit on grounds of jurisdictional issues was quickly granted by the Superior Court judge, essentially killing the class-action lawsuit. "It was a really bizarre and creepy situation," said Toronto lawyer Ralph Lean, who represents the class of affected Canadians in his firm's class actions practice. Bell's lawyer, John MacKinnon, told the court that while he had intended to walk into court with a neutral position, he ended up siding with his clients. "The issue is so fundamental that we wanted to ensure that the court got the complete picture as to why these people should not get their day in court," he said. The search for a little girl who was kidnapped after her mother shot her 7-year-old stepsister dead in their Virginia home is on hold as the suspect recovers from gunshot wounds. School superintendent Wonda Harris told CBS Richmond affiliate WWBT-TV that Shawnee's school will be closed Thursday. Harris says the school's principal phoned her office to tell her the school in Christiansburg, about 48 miles southwest of Richmond, was being evacuated to be secure until the investigation was over. Police say Shawnee was abducted around 3:30 a.m. Wednesday by Shawnee's mother, who shot her stepsister, 7-year-old Selina Diggs, who is critically injured at the scene. Diggs told police she'd been in the back yard when Shawnee came out of the house and asked for something to drink. The mother said she asked her daughter if she had a glass. The girl said she did not, and she came back into the house. Police say the mother followed the girl back inside and asked Selina if she wanted water. The mother told police Selina said she didn't have any water and the mother told her to look for water somewhere else. Police believe the mother shot her stepsister in the chest and then shoved her 7-year-old into the night, leading to a police chase and Shawnee's arrest near the family's home. Get Breaking News Delivered to Your Inbox The child was being driven to a hospital for non-life-threatening injuries and the mother was being sought for murder and other charges. Police say the mother shot the girl inside the home in a "frenzied" state and then drove the child to a wooded area outside the house and allegedly handed her to a man who'd been waiting there for her. Police arrested the woman after the standoff in the Diggs' neighborhood.Q: Как определить количество человек за год в проекте с СМ? Как определить количество человек за год
