Complexity The experience of CSS has been likened to “being on a roller coaster with a centrifuge.” This is because the browser can do so much and developers are forced to write for it. This creates many issues which are (confusingly) all CSS so we also need to think of it as: CSS-ception. As a developer, you may be forgiven for feeling that you can never write simple CSS that works consistently in all browsers. To quote the wise Seinfeld, “It’s a miracle of modern science that CSS works at all.” The prevalence of legacy browsers, the diverging behaviours of major browsers, the reliance on CSS for rendering content, the adoption of a link-based model for HTML that makes accessing CSS external, and the advent of web frameworks and libraries meant that CSS was always going to be a tricky beast.

Probably the single largest contribution to the confusion of CSS is that it's not JavaScript, it's not a markup

language, it can't be a view technology, and it's not a programming language. The “Non-Language” Argument
Of course, those issues are just around its name. Like HTML,
CSS cannot be a

programming language because it is not Turing complete. Because it is not a programming language and is instead a pre-processor, it cannot be a view technology either. And because it is not a

programming language,
it does not even need to be Turing complete.

The “Not A Language” Argument Similar to the “non-language” argument, the proponents of CSS being a language will probably seize on this argument to claim that CSS is just an extension of markup. They might even attempt to propose that block formatting elements like `s` and `s` should be allowed to be nested (at great expense of readability). In a way, the browser does consider it a language with language-like rules for semantic markup and it is already doing it's best to allow this. However, this is not because we have moved beyond HTML; rather, it has been moved past. The browser has seen CSS grow and has adapted with it. A Legacy Of Extensibility CSS started in 1994 as an experiment to see if it could be used as a style sheet language in browsers. It has since seen an evolution in its purpose. The “ Soft-tissue tumors of the hand and foot: a review of 1,770 lesions seen at one institution over the last 20 years. The authors report their experience over the last 20 years in the treatment of soft-tissue tumors of the hand and foot. A retrospective review was performed of all surgical excisions performed in a 20-year period (1971-1990). A total of 1,770 tumors were excised, with a clear predominance for benign lesions (98.7 percent). Lipomas were the most frequent benign lesions (569), followed by fibromas (190), myxomas (136), and neurofibromas (130). Liposarcomas accounted for 45 lesions; other sarcomas included leiomyosarcomas, fibrosarcomas, synovial sarcomas, and angiosarcomas.

Malignant lesions represented 0.3 percent of the study group.

There were no recurrences after biopsy or excision for benign lesions. Of the 449 patients with malignant tumors, 13 developed local recurrences, 2 had metastases, and 4 died. The 10-year disease-free survival rate was 89 percent. Treatment by wide local excision without tumor margin was most effective for lipomas and dermoid cysts. Small lipomas less than 2 cm were excised without immediate reconstruction, whereas the size of the lesion and location were considered in determining whether a soft-tissue flap or tumor excision was used for larger lesions. Complications in the soft-tissue reconstruction included a 12 percent incidence of hypertrophic scarring in the first 2 years. Kingsbury Smith Kingsbury Smith (1763 – 8 December 1811) was an English clergyman and antiquary. Life Smith was born at Hackney, the son of a woollen-draper. He was educated at Hackney grammar school, and was admitted a pensioner at Trinity College, Cambridge, 29

June 1783. He was elected a fellow of his college in 1785, and graduated B.A. in 1787 and M.A. in 1791. He was ordained priest in 1790, and held curacies at Bishop's Stortford, Barnard's Castle, and

Canons Ashby. In 1794 Smith received the rectory of Radwinter, near Maidstone, Kent. In 1797 he became curate of St Peter's, Walworth. In 1799
