I've seen this happen many times to a client of mine (a recent one). The DNS response looks like this, from GoDaddy's DNS: ns1.thedomain.com $TTL 86400 @ IN SOA ns1.thedomain.com. (...) www.thedomain.com $TTL 86400 @ IN NS ns1.thedomain.com. @ IN MX 10 mail.thedomain.com. @ IN TXT "a base64 encoded string here" @ IN SOA ns1.thedomain.com. (...). @ IN A 192.0.2.19 Any guesses as to why GoDaddy changes the TXT record at the bottom when it's been set correctly? A: Google's public servers have a cache of DNS records for a domain, and that cache is updated as often as every day. Some GoDaddy's DNS servers (perhaps the one you're being updated to, I don't know) also have a cache of DNS records, but update it less often. The solution to this is to avoid having the same DNS server configured as your sole authoritative server (e.g., you and only you control NS1 and NS2). Instead, you create different authoritative servers (e.g. ns1.a.com, ns2.a.com, ns1.b.com,...) and configure GoDaddy to use them, instead of changing the DNS records. A: DNS caching at a large ISP is likely. It may be happening at your ISP too.
