Jul 30, 2017 · You can use the "guess pack" version, but not as a standalone, it requires original game to run (and it is.Q: Windows 7 disabling and re-enabling SSPI for domain users I'm working on an intranet application which requires SSPI but will only work with local users. My company's domain users are forced to use NTLM and don't have SSPI enabled. When I log into our machines as a local account, I can connect to the intranet using a local IP and SSPI without any issues. I can set up a virtual machine to do this and that works, but I'm looking for the best way to do this from a Windows 7 domain controller without having to do all the work on the domain controller to force all domain users to enable SSPI. Thanks! A: You could use Kerberos, you would need to run a separate kerberized kerberos service in each of the nodes that the users will be using in order to authenticate their credentials. On server A, you would configure the Ldap user account to use kerberos, and then run the principal setting service as a service account on the domain controller A: netdom "localadministrator" /registerprincipal:KERBEROS "spardev.contoso.local" "Administrator" "SERVICE_A" /psswd "R3DH!c3p0" Then the service account on server A will run as local administrator on the domain controller and will have kerberized kerberos enabled on it's ldap config. Also, you don't need to use SSPI for the applications in
