Autodesk InfraWorks 2018:Q: Looking for a Rebus (or alternative) implementation with pluggable async event handlers I was looking for a Rebus implementation for C#, and found two alternatives: Rebus.Bus with a RebusHandlerStore and Rebus-Handler-Engine Rebus.net with a CallbackStore and Callback-Engine These can all be used to send messages to a queue, and (as far as I can tell) implement the equivalent of the simple example of the Rebus wiki: class MyHandler : IHandleMessages { public void Handle(SomeMessage message) { Console.WriteLine("Handle some message"); } } class Handler { private readonly Rebus _rebus; public Handler(Rebus bus) { _rebus = bus; } public void Send(string payload, DateTime now) { _rebus.Send("some message", payload, now); } }

Autodesk InfraWorks 2015 Student Edition 6.0 (x86-x64).The present invention relates to a system for the detection of the characteristic leakage current of a semiconductor element. A "semiconductor element", as used herein, means a semiconductor element which is used in the semiconductor integrated circuit (IC) field. There is known a semiconductor element whose leakage current increases when the element is short-circuited, so that this leakage current is detected with the use of a detection circuit, whereby the state of use of the element is judged. For example, as shown in FIG. 1, a semiconductor element 1 of a power MOSFET is connected to the positive-potential side of a potential source 2 and is connected to a grounded terminal 3 through an insulated wire 4. In this arrangement, when the element 1 is short-circuited, the current begins to flow from the element 1 to the potential source 2, so that the potential of the element 1 drops. In this case, since the potential drop of the potential source 2 is small, no current flows into the element 1 so that the element 1 is held in the turned-on state. When the element 1 is short
